Unfolding flower petals

When a UFO is falling/floating forward, the energy it uses consecutively unfolds like a flower's petals unfolding: in an overlapping spiral, starting from it's forward surging edge and (in the example i saw) unfolding counter-clockwise in outward waves. Each wave fades out with distance while new waves are born in pulses from the edge of the moving device's sides, then gracefully untwirl through its frontal "cutting edge" area and out into the surrounding space.

When my body is healing itself from within, it uses the same pattern of surging energy, from the membrane of one edge of the section in question til the other edge's boundary, and then after a short black pause, repeats this energy movement, in consecutive pulses. These pulses can proceed faster or slower and be more or less powerful, according to the depth of the injury, the degree of power of the healing given, and the degree of receptivity of the place in the person getting healed.

These 2 very similiar examples were alternatively shown to me in short dream sequences, 3 times each, within the first 4 hours and 15 minutes of my night's sleep. They were the only dream pictures I had in this time, alternating with black sleep, until i finally got up to write this down and draw the illustration.
