

Conjectures about the Advanced Energy Technology
based on my specific UFO sightings

The Puzzle

Note: This section presumes that you have first carefully read all my reported sightings with their illustrations. The constant references to those specific events, with their report numbers in parentheses, illustrate how these after-thoughts make sense. Some of the questions or theories mentioned in those original reports, I here try to deepen or generalize to a larger scale.

My various earlier comparative analyses have been solely based on the details of my actual earlier sightings, as the raw material for my investigations of those UFOs' varying appearances, shifting colours and shapes, and surprising movements.

Starting in the details of an event, and comparing those from various events into broader summaries of what the sightings had in common, I'm now trying to best fill in the missing implied details and discover their patterns of frames. Using logic and pop-up insights, I've tried to intuitively find the lines of evidence, most likely hypotheses, and tentative conclusions.

From the directly observed evidence, I here move on to some of my best guesses concerning their physical, energy, and consciousness technologies; and their speedy innovations, possible strategies, interactive communication, and plausible motivations.

What I consider here is only a small proportion of the relevant questions. The following after-thoughts about these pooled experiences attempt to uncover some half-hidden, implied extra pieces of the UFO-puzzle.

Traditional Parameters

Time of day

All but one of my sightings were during the night or evening, dusk or early morning, not during full daylight. Maybe it's easier for UFOs to ride along the currents of the Earth's magnetic field and manoever in the atmosphere when the unstable solar wind is not interfering. The contrast between the dark or darkening sky and the UFO's bright or fuzzy whiteness impresses the mind at once.

Speed

The speed was never beyond what I could clearly register. It was either 1½-5 times faster than a jet, slower than a passenger airplane, moving and then standing still, standing still and then moving, or making acute turns without an apparent pause in time.

In one incident, the UFO's apparently sudden extreme drop in altitude made it look much faster afterwards, until it popped back to its earlier height and evident speed. In another, the pair's irregular weaving across each other's path necessitated each one's speeding up and down along the way. (#2, 3)

Both flying at all speeds and standing stationary during all sightings was in total silence.

Pausing in flight and continuing (#6, 12, 14, 17)

Side-tracking and weaving (#3, 4, 10)
Sharp angular (#2)

Ultra-short sightings

The brevity of most of the sightings (between 1-6 seconds) could be to ensure that the visual contents register deeper in the viewer, beneath habitual filtering mechanisms, and to invite subjective consciousness to investigate further so as to complete a whole "thought-bite". That is, to shock the mind and maximize reception. (#1-10, 15, 16, 18)

Long sightings

The later high-intensity sightings of ca. 30-60 minutes were probably to shock the mind by feeding it to its maximum fully receptive ability, thus encouraging a deep long-lasting understanding, and immediate confusion about the many details, leading to curiosity to know and piece together more. (#11-14)

The UFO's Construction

Bottom side's anti-gravity adjustment system

The red "braking" rotations from the center-out on the bottom side of the "crash-descending" UFO must be a precisely controlled anti-gravitational technology, allowing for briefly and precisely partly following the normal gravitational pull from the Earth – and then abruptly returning to its controlled degree of anti-local-gravity again, when the UFO tilted back to its earlier apparently small shape and/or presumed long distance and resumed its flight across the sky. (#2)

Each object had a small black circular center, with a large surrounding roughly circular, yellowish/fuzzy-white area of revolving, rolling energy, which had been red in the 2 days' earlier event. These were however flying roughly parallel to the Earth, instead of steeply down toward it – so the yellowish shade may be from counteracting their proximity to Earth's gravity pull, and the earlier red colour from that dive's extreme friction. (#4, 2)

The UFO's soft-edged round core of bright white light quickly and silently expanded outwards to a gently-edged regular shape 3 times its diameter, with many radial sections, each roundly and broadly peaked, and each subdivided into bilateral and finely concavely-curved subsections. Its outer convexly-curved peaks were connected by a somewhat concave and half-transparent outer boundary layer.

This seemed to be the activation of its preparatory state, before its sections begin internally rotating and revolving during its twirling state, later ending in the fast contraction to its original size. (#18)

In 2 early sightings, each somewhat elliptical circle had a small black center and a sliver of a defined arc of white light outside most of its left or right side (which hinted at an opposite top side with curved height, and the UFO's being tilted). The gravity-gauging and gravity-adjusting flat side with a small center normally faces the Earth, both while hovering still and under flight, while the partly seen rounded side faces away from the Earth. (#2, 5)

When it's observed close to ground level, the semi-circle, triangle, tripod-shape etc. would be its side-view, while its bottom still faces the ground. (#2, 4, 9)

The small gray center

During the high-flying sightings, the comparatively large, soft-white surrounding layer – whether it was oblong, round, or with roundish irregular hazy edges - almost always had a small black or gray circular center.

This might usually be the center of the craft's energized anti-gravity bottom side; sometimes be the site of the top side's column and antenna for collecting focused electro-magnetic signals; and when the gray itself was much elongated, sometimes be the total craft at a distance, with its broad energy-field around it. (#2, 4, 5, 10, 16, 17)

The relative diameter of the sometimes seen column at the UFO's top, roughly corresponds to that of the circular center of the disk's bottom. Maybe they're a connected component, where the bottom controls the release of a chosen degree of configured strong energy for repulsion (or remains turned off, for neutral attraction), and could be used for high-distance broad scanning and specific analyses, while the top sends and receives finer signals for reconnaissance and communication.

Perhaps the small, round dark center extends through the UFO and is also its two-ended sensor for collecting and sending electro-magnetic signals.

The cylinder with its antenna unlit, broadly lit, or emitting a series of signals

A very bright UFO hovering over a field sometimes aims a bright spotlight with a focused stream of light straight at the observer, which also changes its direction as the observer changes their location. This both effectively attracts and focuses the witness' attention, and makes any possible in-depth analyzing of the viewed person easier.

Behind the brightness, on closer inspection the UFO often consists of a wide, large base topped by a thin round-cornered cylinder which contains a detailed signalling section. (#11-14)

This column could be an adjustable, retractable and extendable periscope rising up from inside the object, to visually examine or signal toward a target or the local environment on a fairly horizontal plane, but otherwise kept inside for much longer-range spatial signalling, so as to make the craft's transportation more aerodynamic, smoother and faster.

Seen through binoculars, this column's antenna-section has two adjacent vertical rows of at least 4 lights each, with each independently flashing on (red) and off (black) at (for us) a barely comprehensible fast speed, creating a huge permutation of possible light-signal combinations. (#14)

During our antenna-mediated contacts they thereby offered a kind of dialogue: their arrangements of flashing signals together with my unconscious responses, so long as I watched them. Whether seen by the naked eye as an undifferentiated bright or flashing shine, or magnified in detail, the sequential information being sent through these combinations will be perceived by the unconscious mind.

Relative shapes

The base under the cylinder

The supportive base beneath the stable cylinder was highly transformable within the same event. It has many varieties of shapes: as the top or bottom half of a semi-circle, a bright circle, a round-cornered triangle, sharp-cornered triangle, horizontal rectangle, and as a pair of diagonal legs. (#11-14)

Since these sometimes quickly evolved from one form into another, its external material can't be frozen physical, like our solid state, but of a more malleable form between the liquid and solid states. It must be made of a plastic material which can be programmed to efficiently transform into a new mode, while its unseen core possibly remains stable. When the UFO is only partially visible, perhaps it's between solid and gaseous energetic states.

The lowly hovering, cylindered triangular-based UFOs in all the long sightings' events, flew only a short way and quite slowly. Perhaps such a cumbersome form could fold together again, since each showed the ability to change its shape.

In #11, the base was a round-cornered white triangle flashing tensely.

In #12, it was first a sharp-cornered white triangle radiating almost painfully intense energy and with a large circular center of beamed focused light; becoming the top half of a semi-circle, barely lit, but with thin side-slots streaming white light diagonally downwards.

In #13, it had 4 separate forms: Firstly, with 2 diagonally-pronged legs, pulsating together with its vertical cylinder red and then white light, plus each leg with a thin side-slot beaming mild light a little diagonally upwards – and with the shine of the whole UFO erratically turned down or strongly up. Secondly, as the stably white bottom half of a semi-circle. Thirdly, as a horizontal rectangle protruding to the right and left under the cylinder, where the base shone white or red in different flight positions, either together with or in opposition to the cylinder's colour. Fourthly as a sharp-cornered triangle, all red, then red on part of one side of its area, then all red again.

The series of steps where the UFO changes forms illustrates a teaching lesson, like pieces in a jigsaw puzzle. Here's a detailed attempt at unravelling the message behind the first 4 steps in the initial sequence of #13 (see its "illustration detail part 1"). The whole sequence outlines the process of gathering energy and sending complicated sequences of signals through the cylinder's antenna:

a) The white 3-pronged form may illustrate taking energy from the ground and passing it on to the cylinder. b) The base changes into the lower half of a white sphere with its now filled up and self-contained energy, which is passed on to the highlighted red cylinder above it. c) The cylinder's areas are divided into red and black horizontal layers, where the bottom half-layer is black - illustrating the turned on and turned off signalling principle in half-layers. d) 4 red boxes, touching only at their corners in 3 separate rows, illustrate part of a conglomerate pattern of the simultaneous signalling from the cylinder's antenna area.

And here's a second effort at finding meaning behind the UFO's consecutive forms in the fourth sequence of #13 (see its "illustration detail part 4").

The UFO's red rectangular base and cylindrical top had the simplified, schematic form as many of our cars, with its front motor area, protruding back trunk area, and passenger area; but this form flew back and forth across the road at just above car-level, as opposed to driving down it; it took on the red color of a car's tail-lights when a car approached in the distance, and froze in the air at a little distance as it drove by; and it looked about the same comparative length as the passing car. When the dark country road was again empty, the UFO's base became triangular, and it slowly flew toward the woods together with a vague, about 6-times-as-long, cigar-shaped object in its background.

Maybe it was showing symbolically that where it comes from, it functions as a low-flying, similar transportation system. Maybe the perhaps half-materialized cigar is an inter-stellar, fairly non-frictional, protective carrier of several of these versatile, smaller UFOs. Maybe their slow speed was for my better comprehension.

In #14, the antenna lesson continues and bears fruit. Behind the cylindered base's bright circular shine, magnification with binoculars revealed its round-cornered triangular form with its cylinder and at least 8 super-actively signalling boxes in its antenna.

Elliptical stretched circles

When the UFO was posing as a standing star in the "Big Dipper" event, it was fairly circular. Why are the soft-white UFOs in distant flight practically always elliptical circles? The obvious answer would be that they're just two different sorts. But since UFOs changed shapes during some of the witnessed events, I wonder if the sometimes circular or semi-circular state at rest becomes somehow stretched during distant movement. (#2, 3, 5, 16)

Due to the greater distance through an arc high in the sky, the UFO will be flying faster there, although its pace may look leisurely from here. During faster flight, the craft's material state might be stretched to longish elliptical, probably in order to gracefully match its surrounding congruent energy-conversion field, which is exchanging more fluidly, with more plasticity, during speedy movement.

So the UFO's external material would not be frozen physical, like our solid state, but a more malleable form between the liquid and solid states. When the UFO is only partially visible, perhaps it's between solid and gaseous energetic states.

Forms and Layers of White Energy

Energy star-burst flashes

The silent, briefly lit star-formed energy bursts, 5 or more in a consecutive non-linear pattern, were seen by themselves twice: once extremely close-by near the ground and once in the sky. At another event, the nearly ground-level and still UFO disappeared, the energy stars lit up in the space above it, and it immediately reappeared again in the air just above these. What do these phenomena have in common? (#1, 9, 15)

Maybe the stars are a bi-product of flashing out excess energy or snapping it up, during a quick exchange with the Earth's atmosphere. In the ground-level event, they may also express a fast transitional stage of the UFO shell's electromagnetic charge, as it re-charged from the high-power electricity pole next to it. (#9)

During one of my last direct experiences, the cloud-level event's complex behaviour offered me a deeper understanding of the starbursts-phenomenon, through its more revealing layers.

These bright flashes can sometimes be the outer covering or product of a deeper or preceding source. Throughout that incident, the large bright light progressed in series of star-shaped flashes with varying sharp, acute-angled positions. Either the flying light alone, projected from somewhere else, turned on and off, or maybe a source or object inside the brightness repeatedly materialized and dematerialized. Their source could be external, internal, or both.

Within one of that event's series, a thin stream of light shot forwards, back to its former position, and then forwards again, before the next flash between those positions. The energy release can evidently also be concentrated and shot out like a rebounding laser for some purpose. (#15)

This reminds me of the 2 sightings of UFO pairs where a moving, guiding or protective field was placed both in front of and behind them. And also of the long sightings, where a bright light on closer inspection revealed a UFO with a lit spotlight or signalling antenna behind the initial impression.
(# 4, 14, 16)

When seen by themselves, maybe these bright energy-stars were a personal transitional invitation, an easy way to make contact with me and a prologue to a series of UFO sightings and lessons, both at my close-up first-ever event, and again at the first distant event after I'd rebelled against the full UFO's being so close to me and sending complex signals for such a long time. (#1, 15)

The personal zone's white energy field

I recognized the 2 UFOs at once by their typical elliptical fuzzy shape, and their standard soft shade of white. Each somewhat elliptical circle had a thin layer of a slightly transparent light around its fuzzy perimeter, a small dark center, and a sliver of a well-defined white dome along one of its sides. The soft white energy shell or aura around a high-flying UFO's center or whole body is much bigger than the darker part inside it. (#5)

The surrounding white field might be softly hazy because its radial sections are internally enfolding and relaying information and energy as it moves along, and its perimeter fuzzy because its contours are malleable, sometimes expanding and contracting, flowing. (# 18)

It seemed as if each of the distant pair's long gray objects was immobile yet floating, and creating or using their immediately surrounding white fields, which seemed to be in constant internal circulation. (#16)

The 4 UFOs' low flight together showed a close-up of the loosely-contoured egg of revolving and rolling whitish energy surrounding each UFO's center. (#4)

Perhaps the soft, vibrant white layer is both a protective buffer field against surrounding atmospheric friction and local planetary gravity, and a carry-along neutral "free zone", in which the UFO can effortlessly change its directions, speeds, and altitudes.

The loosely-contoured, fuzzy yet sometimes bright energy field might be a flexible plasma, a highly energized gas, made by mixing our planet's atmospheric ingredients with the appropriate high energy emitted or stimulated by the UFO.

The pair-locking coordination layer

Each object had a second outer area with flexible edges of soft white light around it. This layer maintained a broad touching contact between the 2 coordinated members of each pair, and perhaps they also automatically shared part of their consciousness together. Both fully adjoined partners in each pair flew a multi-curving and strictly parallel course. (#4)

Each of the 2 gray, elliptical objects was surrounded by a layer of its same width of bright white thick energy, and with a narrow bridge of the same white light connecting the layers. So the two individual fields gave or shared part of their periphery in common, and this kept them at the right stable distance from each other, so they could safely manoeuvre together as a unit. (#16)

The pair's outer shell or stream

When a close pair of UFOs shares their energy together in some adjacent area along their sides, each giving a portion of their energy for their identical course of flight - they must also create another balancing layer, a visible outer shell or stream which interacts with the space both ahead of and behind them, to safely stabilize their ongoing flight path.

There was a stream of white current both immediately behind and in front of each pair, as if its UFOs were floating down mutually interlocked streams.

There was also a long, surrounding, finer and lighter white field or outer shell, which stretched as far out as the length of the UFO pair's inner connecting system, both in front of and behind it, but which in the middle was merely that system's width.

This outer shell effortlessly somehow opened up the atmosphere met in front of it, which then streamed around the onward-moving shell's sides, gathering again into its normal consistency behind it. (#16)

Maybe they can with minimal effort adjust to and ride the Earth's fluctuating magnetic fields and other currents of atmospheric energy, taking into the shell from the front only what they need, and continuously releasing it again behind them.

Perhaps this outer path-clearing layer also exists for more separated pairs and single-flying UFOs, but if so, it's not visible to us.

The synchronous "free-lance" zone

During the 4 UFOs sighting, the 2 pairs' flight patterns together seemed "free-lance" or "hand-steered", not tightly synchronized. When these pairs flew quickly close to and then farther away from each other, the coordinating must have been mutually and simultaneously controlled from within each pair. (#4)

The previous sighting two days earlier, where a single pair of UFOs seemingly independently weaved across each other's flight paths, in fact showed their extreme flight control together, that they could manoeuvre both geometrically precisely and curving playfully through a long stretch of the open sky. (#3)

Colours and degrees of Visibility

Bright white light

In 9 of the 14 short sightings, the UFO was very bright, even shiny. Aside from becoming obvious, this seemed to accompany sudden powerful energy outlets or using much strong power: All 3 incidents with quick star-burst energy flashes were bright; at the 3 sudden pop-up materializations - of the daytime's initially stationary rounded-triangle, of the early night's half-donut shape in flight, and of the late night's expanding and retracting circular core; in one distant pair event, the UFOs' clearly interlocked energy field could have constantly required extra energy for the safety of their identical flight paths; the UFOs were brightly, clearly obvious during the 2 sightings with another witness next to me who wanted to see one; posing as a star in the "Big Dipper" constellation meant appearing as bright as its other main stars. (#1, 5-8, 15-18)

In all of the long sightings, the UFO used bright white light in varying ways for both assuring the viewer's attention and as non-verbal communication. In differing situations, it was radiating intensely, sharply twinkling from its brightness, flashing straight toward me, beaming focused at me, and turning the brightness of its beaming or pulsating up and down. (#11-14)

Here's guessing at possible reasons for these variations, from their contexts:

In #11, the flashing from two sources in different colours from the same craft was perhaps to underline that this exotically-formed, large, silent object was indeed a UFO.

In #12, the same form, but here enlarged, was perhaps now intensely radiating from the process of generating and relaying strong energy, to send its very focused light straight at me from 2 separated, circular, central areas for several consecutive minutes.

In #13, the pulsating, 2-legged base might have step-by-step been accumulating energy, to power the following 3 demonstrations of its cylinder's make-up.

As I at last walked home from the field, the UFO at a long distance got brighter. A very human interpretation might be, "I'm still here" or "Come back again" or "Goodbye".

In #14, both its initial twinkling from brightness, and the strongly shining, distracting magnification of its light through the binoculars, were perhaps also intended to camouflage the details of its cylinder's 8-celled coordinated blinking.

Besides fuelling that ultra-fast signalling for at least an hour, maybe there was judged to be no advantage to be gained from the viewer's consciously seeing and registering those many shifting details. (And, in fact, they unnerved me so much that I cut short both the individual and the entire series of those sightings.)

Range of colours and shifting colours

The shifting colours of the UFO most likely show changes in its energy frequency, just as differing high temperatures change the colours of a star or molten metal: from yellow to orange, red, white, and blue.

The UFO's distance from the Earth's surface, its speed, and its angle of flight compared to the ground would determine the necessary degree of anti-gravity to be used.

Small white circular and white oval UFOs are usually high in the sky, whereas small red circular UFOs were near the ground and relatively close up.

In two sightings, a low-flying red circle became white. Once before changing shape into a larger, strongly flashing white triangle and red top (#11), which might mean that it needed to quickly gather more energy before transitioning into its more power-craving form. Once when it was consecutively hopping backwards over a field, whenever I renewed walking and reached beyond a certain distance to it, again requiring fast energy (#13).

A low-flying large UFO's sudden, speedy descending produces a fast-revolving red energy, which rolls the friction away (#3). A connected pair of large UFOs, quickly flying at a low, fairly steady height produces a similar, but slightly yellowish-white revolving energy (#4).

The cylinder and antenna sections used for signalling, flashed or blinked in red (#11-14).

Two sightings began with reddish orange ovals hovering low in the sky above fields. As both were replaced by a cylindered triangle which shined brightly at me for a long time, they might have been a warm-up transforming stage of it (#12, 14).

At the other end of this energy scale, the light-orange semi-circular UFO close to the ground, at the base of the ultra-powerful electricity mast, was thought to be recharging its own depleted power (#9).

When UFOs are close to the ground, both when stationary and slowly flying, the shades of their visual layer - yellowish orange, light orange, dark orange, reddish orange, red, reddish white (#2, 9, 12-14) - must be the colours of their required level and type of gravity-resisting and broadcasted energy.

During the 14-day period's series of long sightings with unfathomly complex 8-celled signalling, the stationary UFO's triangular base perhaps had different colours on different occasions because it powered the antenna's sending or collecting/reading of complicated information through differing wave-lengths of light, possibly aimed at varying levels of the witness' sense-receptors, nervous system, cellular memory, and so on (#14).

Partial visibility, opaqueness, reflection, and transparency

In many sightings the entire UFO or only part of it suddenly or gradually appeared or disappeared, while the UFO was in full flight or lowly hovering close by. Perhaps it was instantaneously shifting its energy wavelength, or even wholly materializing/dematerializing from or into some more basic reservoir of energy?

The ability to suddenly become visible or invisible in mid-air shows a purposeful shift into and out of the thin electromagnetic window of our normal visual perception's ability, popularly labeled "shifting dimensions". They are obviously aware of the fine edges of, and can move in and out of, the degrees of physical dimensions which our unaided limited senses can directly perceive.

Being on the edge of visibility may be to stimulate us to be aware of planes of existence outside our own visible window. Our brains are about 80% geared to visual cues, so this controlled invisibility catches our attention, forcing us to expand our concept of "reality". (7-9, 12, 13, 18)

When only part of the customary symmetric UFO shape with its energy shell is visible during flight in full daylight, our mind can easily assume that the missing part is still there and somehow invisible rather than non-existent – which also makes most sense mechanically. Perhaps it's external layer might be able to bend or reflect the light and energy around that unseen part. This dramatic contrast ensures the viewer's follow-up curiosity. (#8, 9)

In sighting #8, it could have been either the side-view of a domed UFO flying with its straight base in front, and with a small central area lacking, not materialized, made invisible, or made transparent - or the circular bottom or top view of a UFO, with both one semi-circular side and its total center somehow visually missing. (#8)

A week later at the next event, the "energy-uploading" incident by the high-powered electric mast, the object's shape fits with the "the side view" hypothesis of the previous sighting. The orange-lit semi-circular UFO at its near-ground location briefly had a darkened small rectangular section with rounded corners, indented in its side or off-centered in its bottom. This section can be opened up or made invisible – as is evident from its quickly thereafter again being lit up and seamlessly part of the whole semi-circle.

Perhaps this unlit side portal or rounded door is where the observed being had come outside and was to re-enter, but became stranded, due to the time-pressure of my closing approach with my barking dog. (#9)

Contemplations about the series of the most complex and long-lasting sightings
(#11, 12, 13, 14)

Comments about 6.1.76 sighting
(Review #11 first)

Apart from my first dramatic UFO experience (#2), this was the first time i saw a UFO dramatically change shape. From a low-flying small round red light to a low-flying small round white light, becoming a stationary but same-sized, flashing red light on top of a larger round-cornered triangular base flashing white light, with both shining their connected light directly at me, then low-flying backwards, becoming a small round steady red light again and flying up and away.

It very likely retreated backwards partly because my non-comprehending dog was too eagerly approaching it in front of me, as in 2-3 other sightings (#9, 12, 13) together with my excited dog.

The next small red light to the far left, half a minute later, was most likely the same craft in a less obvious location.

Perhaps the small round light was the lit top seen from a sideways view, while the rest of the craft had been made to reflect the nearby sky or invisible to us. Or else the object had unfolded or metamorphosized into a much larger and more complicated triangular base under the roundish top.

Comments about 25.1.76 sighting
(Review #12 first)

Perhaps the UFOs had learned a lesson from the previous event (#11), where the general public's anxious responses and the military helicopters' noisy, clumsy investigations were not from an unequivocally sharing, positively communicating spirit.

And they thus returned to the inconspicuous setting, outside the public eye, of fields away from apartment buildings and the coast, to instead contact one interested, co-involved, positive viewer, showing basically the same information in more detail plus a new full-sized shape.

As the oval UFO stood still and then flew slowly, it gave me time to carefully observe it. The oval's curved mid-line suggests two separated halves, and indeed the following UFO forms had two very different sections with differing functions. The airborne spotlights shined directly at the craft, and after it disappeared, shined briefly upwards, perhaps implying that it went that way.

A minute after they turned off, the much larger white triangle with its cylindrical top appeared in the same place as the middle spotlight had been. Either the spotlight had been connected to it, or this was because my attention was already in that place.

This form was a larger close-up in more details of the previous event's main UFO. This triangle radiated an almost painfully intensive white energy and focused a strong beam directly at me from its big central circular area, while the now cylindrical red top shined slightly sideways and brightly red from its own small circular area.

The cylinder's circular-light section was off-centered from the triangle's head-on circular-light, so this implies that the cylinder was one-eyed and could rotate independently of its base. So they could apparently shine in each their direction.

The base in its present triangular form shined intensely head on (like an eye that can rotate while still facing forward), but in its following much less bright semi-circular form, diagonally streamed mild light sideways toward the ground from a narrow slot halfway up each side. So the craft seems to have had various light portals with adjustable strengths.

The white-coloured metallic shine of the triangle may be from the stronger energy intensity which might be required to uphold those more sharply defined geometrical contours and for its very strong and precise emission of white light.

The intensely beaming red and central circular light areas maybe measure or read the viewer's brain-waves, to either study the human brain or to communicate individually. After the triangle's movable light shined directly at or into me for about 5 minutes, it seemed to have gotten its fill of studying me, since the UFO then glided away. But as I walked onwards, it briefly beamed at me again, got suddenly brighter, then less bright again (reminds me of a greeting), before I returned home.

Just as a UFO could earlier pose as a star, near the end of this event, it glided far back and turned its light down enough to resemble a distant street lamp - while in those fields with a few dark farms there were no street lights or spotlight set-ups. But its light was flickering regularly, as if rotating to examine the general surrounding environment.

It controlled if it was inconspicuous and easily overseen by "chance" viewers, or was obvious to someone. It could approach or retreat, beam or uniformly mildly radiate, be "in the spotlight" or vanish.

There were several obvious, but much more detailed repetitions of unusual phenomena from Jan. 6 on Jan. 25, 1976.

This time, the 3 white spotlights from the air were exactly the same as the 4 earlier ones. The red cylindrical top and white triangular base were a close-up of the red and white UFO which had flashed intensively toward me on Jan. 6, but now its directed lights were constant, more compact and defined and intense, and continuous for 5 minutes. No type of helicopter has that shape. In both cases this UFO flew backwards, and turned around or stopped its focused beaming.

Why did those earlier spotlights, which I'd assumed to all be man-made, stationary searchlights which could turn in any direction in case of dangers at sea during fog and storms, look the same as now? The most likely explanation is that they too were actually some sort of UFO technology, separate from the abundant fixed coastline lights and the various lights on military helicopters. Maybe a hosting UFO can project spotlights which can shine back at itself and in adjustable directions, be made stronger or weaker, turned on and off?

Were the UFOs now just continuing their earlier lesson with more details, combined with phenomena new for me? Or did they know about my doubts and inward retreat, and what they should show me as an antidote? Were these details copied partly in order to reassure my psychological attitude toward UFOs, which since the lap-over of the para-normal and worldly mundane in the previous event, had become confused, pessimistic, and rejecting about contact?

The repetitions were probably both to underline earlier authenticity, give me more details, and to deepen our mutual contact.

Comments about 27.1.76 sighting
(Review #13 first)

I might have been allowed closer without my nervous, sometimes barking dog.

I was shown at least 9 new UFO shapes. These included mind-boggling: a very large oval craft slowly flying synchronized behind 2 red blinking lights, a broad and very long darkish cigar shape slowly flying as a back-drop behind a red cylinder-topped bi-coloured triangle, and a brief ultra-close flying boomerang-shaped "light-body".

3 other shapes, which I'd first seen during the previous 2 sightings, were placed in the context of the fast-changing forms.

The erratically pulsating, initially red and then white, 3-forked stationary object was visually obvious. Its 2 slanting legs amazed me, as the base of each earlier UFO had been flat or rounded. Each of those legs also shined mild light, aimed slightly diagonally upwards, through a side-slit. Their shining angle was adjustable, as it had two days earlier been downwards.

Its base then became a round-bottomed semi-circle, which surprised me because that shape couldn't stand stably on the ground. But that wouldn't matter, if it sufficed for the object to float slightly above ground-level, to make a quicker and smoother get-away when necessary.

Then, base gone, its now red top cylinder by itself took the focus. It showed that it contained alternating red and black horizontal layers, then that each layer contained 2 or 3 square sections, which could each be lit red or left unlit black, and was then replaced by a red spot.

Just afterwards the whole UFO reappeared, but its base was now a white rectangle and its top a white cylinder – which was a mental appetizer, as many minutes later, after other powerful events with other new-shaped objects, the same shape was detailed within another sequence in another location.

The 2 red, round and clearly contoured circular lights' strong blinking riveted my focus on the stationary, oblong, vague object behind them, which was about 9-12 meters long and 6-8 meters broad (30-40 feet X 20-26 feet). This oval was like a close-up version of the "hamburger bun" shape from 2-days earlier (#12). It was the largest close-up UFO I've seen, and the red lights, which were in front of its horizontal diameter, must have each been less than a meter (3 feet) in diameter. When I approached the group, they slowly flew coordinated together, sideways to behind some trees. So the lights could simply be connected to the oval, or it could be their background "master ship".

The path of the almost transparent and hazy-edged boomerang took a sharp dive from straight overhead to close down in front of me, before turning off or extinguishing, so I believe it was a reconnaissance drone, which is probably used for scanning multiple energy-parameters, when deeply investigating a close-range or local object. Likewise, in sighting #8, the half to 2/3 donut-shaped, fuzzy white energy object which suddenly faded out after 1 second's flight, was perhaps but another view or variation of such a flare probe. During sighting #11, the "white-light something", which at a significant distance from the mixed mesh of events, quickly flew in a diagonally downwards arc and disappeared behind some trees was probably also such an investigative tool.

The rectangular-based and cylinder-topped UFO changed within 7 minutes during its slow flight from shining all red, to half red and half white, to all white, and back to all red. It flew at a leisurely pace back and forth across the road, and then paused when the lights from a seldom car distantly approached on the winding country road. Judging from the length between the car's headlights and tail-lights when abreast, the UFO in the air looked about the same length. Perhaps it had turned red for camouflage, in case the driver saw it in his back mirror. Shortly after the car had passed, it flew again across the road at just above car-level.

It then changed to triangular-based, and went from all red, to red in part of the base's area and white in most of it, to all red again. This might highlight that the triangular shape has various surfaces, like a 3-sided or 4-sided pyramid. It may also have been to show me its versatility of colour-changes at the same speed of flight, and that a gradual colour-shift is possible, rather than abruptly all at once.

All previous abrupt changes in a UFO's shape and colour were perhaps to illustrate their temporary "end-stations", often punctuated with brief darkness between them, for my blinking on-and-off senses and binary brain, rather than to confuse it with also the actual and gradual, fast transitions between their "stations" (#13).

The cigar shape was independent of the cylindered triangle in front of it, because their relative positions changed as they flew. It was much longer than the oval, but its height was close to the cylindered triangle's height – which is why I wondered if the latter could enter and exit from the former.

Wouldn't the uncoloured vagueness of both this shape and the earlier large oval imply that at least for now, they were not entirely materialized? They might be larger host-ships for a group of the smaller UFOs of various kinds. They might be like a local power-station – being in a middle form of materialization, and having more practical shapes for the transformation of a team of UFOs through or to another dimension.

Comments about #14 sightings
(Review #14 first)

The round-cornered triangle with its antenna cylinder, basically stationary and the same approximate size, was white, or reddish white, or yellowish-orange white on differing evenings. I suppose the desired wave-lengths of its light had different purposes and determined its colour.

Some evenings it didn't blink, and just flew slowly away. Was this to whet my curiosity for more action, or because I was perceived as too unreceptive that evening, or for another reason?

The UFOs here used a favourite pedagogical tool: A simple shortly-viewed shape in one sighting was the introduction to its more detailed version in especially the following, but also later sightings.

The brief and simple triangle with rounded corners in sighting #7 was perhaps the original precursor of its more detailed, developed forms in the complex sightings. Now, many weeks later, the white round-cornered triangle with cylindrical top was initially the same shape and colour as the very last seen, distant UFO in the previous sighting only days before. The antenna's components for complex signalling were likewise briefly outlined in bites of a section of that most recent event (#13 + 14).

The great number of types of forms, and their many transformations in quick succession overwhelmed me in #13. But the UFO's usually unending presence in a calming, stable form and the contrast of its magnified super-fast changing patterns of signals unnerved me in #14.

Shock

On Jan. 6, I experienced my first sighting where the general public was openly invited, even before I knew of it (#11). And my first lasting most of an hour, as opposed to under 10 seconds. And the only one where helicopters and numerous spotlights dramatically investigated the area afterwards. During this sighting, I went into shock when experiencing the mixture of actual UFOs and the investigations by military helicopters and focused coastal lights. That made it hard for me to straightforwardly and soon accept the event as an extensive UFO sighting, and I put off writing it up.

Although that mixture was promptly much clarified by the UFOs during the next sighting on Jan. 25 (#12), the self-disgust at my assumed gullibility and then later years'-long pessimistic mistrust of my own judgements of my sightings, made me blind to this considerate clarification. And I did not discover those obvious, clarifying repetitions and the reassurance they immediately give, until writing this comparative analysis in June, 2024!

From my UFOs experience on Jan. 25, where I'd been examined for 5 minutes in depth in direct spotlight, I then realized that not all the phenomena which I'd witnessed on Jan. 6, could have been helicopters and man-made searchlights - some were real UFOs. As I remembered the previous sighting very clearly, I could still record its details 3 weeks later, on Jan. 26.

Jan. 27, the very next night, I experienced, illustrated, and wrote up the 2-page description of a new marathon series of sightings (#13).

But the wealth in its profound mysteries and their brewing repercussions overcame my mind, and my accumulated self-doubts about my own interpretative objectivity, begun on Jan. 6 and which I'd tentatively sorted out Jan. 25, fermented again.

I was still in partial shock over the half-revealed implications of some of the details from these 3 sightings, when the 14-day series of complex antenna-signalling occurred next (#14) - which I originally finally artificially aborted, using the illogical "helicopter" pseudo-explanation for myself and others.

Around April 9, I opted for the "self-deception" explanation, and threw out my original written description from Jan. 27 (but kept its meticulous and annotated illustrations), locking too unsettling parts of its episodes into the back of my mind.

First 13 years afterwards, in 1992, had I enough assured inner balance about the judgements of my UFOs period, to investigate all types of helicopters and their actual mechanical possibilities, which effectively disproved my background doubts. So I was first relieved and inspired enough to write up #14 in 1992.

But I first felt inwardly relaxed enough to dig out my deep-frozen memories from the Jan. 27, 1976 events, and to again write up the full explanatory report matching its illustrations – after a further 24 years (!), in July, 2016. That's how deep my existential shock was.

Designed UFOonauts

The being's clumsy running movements, its black body suit, small height, and the lack of later footprints in the morning's dried mud, made me think of a biologically-formed cognizant robot. The gravity-field conditions inside the active UFO must be much different than outside on our ground, accounting for its clumsiness. Perhaps any fabricated operators of a UFO are small and fragile because their mission requires quick responses, sensitive perception, mental adroitness, and technical skill more than muscular strength, and so the UFO itself can be made smaller and more compact. (#9)

Stepping entirely outside my own experience for a minute, an insider whistleblower (I don't remember who) has claimed that in an autopsy dissection, a small gray UFO pilot had basically only one internal organ, which is used for multiple purposes. If true, this makes sense. As these distant travellers have no practical need for most of our internal organs and systems, they probably have much simpler bodily functions. Many have claimed that the stereotype facial features of these "greys" are typically large cranial volume and eyes, a thin mouth, no external ears, possibly nostrils but no bulging nose.

Vision is long-range, cognitive abilities digest perceptions, and both are valuable during explorations of foreign places, whereas a robot with no digestive, blood or lymph circulatory, hormonal, or reproductive systems has little use for close-up smell and taste. They probably effectively communicate using telepathic electronic signals, not mouth-spoken language.

They must be mostly acting from the viewpoint of their own mental abilities and consciousness technologies, without themselves sharing the vulnerable boundaries of our bodily, emotional, and psychological systems. Since our blinding passions have their base in our biology, these UFO-nauts demonstrate for us high cognitive functioning without our passionate excesses. So there will be inevitable mismatches with we humans, and when I got deeply exhausted and "used up" during my periods of sightings, it was up to me to retreat in some way.

The orchestrated "crash descent" during my first real UFO sighting was perhaps to stimulate and then gauge my passionate response. Their own response to my unexpected passionate outbreak during the 10th sighting, was for them unexpected because they had just graciously shown me sensitive consideration by keeping the time-field for sightings open through broken minutes and from varying viewpoints, so that I could experience all 3 stages of that event. (#2, 10).

Thinking pseudo-biological robots are probably doing the field-work here. These UFO-nauts most likely have an internalized computer system, combining visual and other cues with a super-speedy analysis of them, besides using external tools. Considering the modern military danger of visiting humans here, their designers would stay safely at home, following and monitoring their artificial UFO-nauts' information gathering and levels of relations with us.

The intelligent beings behind a UFO's and UFO-naut's coordinated computations may well have had millions of years more time to develop more advanced computerized technologies than those we presently have.

Their UFO-nauts may be made to somewhat resemble those they visit, so that other models would somewhat mimic the dominating or studied creatures of other planets. The most common model here (small grey humanoids) would be tailored to be within our own degree of comprehension and operation, to create some family match between us. This model is probably purposely only a few generations ahead of our existing computer technology. Our own technology is already only a few generations behind operating computer chips into us.

Masterful Inter-cognitive Expertise

Interception of visual currents

Maybe they use an electromagnetic mentally-receptive technology for patrolling the skies. When I start to dwell on a section of the stars, my mental energy flies through space there, and intelligent energy-forms near my line of vision, with an interest in contact, may almost immediately register that current.

Perhaps there are two kinds of visual currents or bands: a broad one which transports through long distances, and a more focused one for closer, almost instantaneous contact within the narrow area of sky someone's looking at.

Precision telepathy and electro-magnetic consciousness technology

The UFO often initiates contact with the isolated viewer by attracting his attention in many ways. The fact was that I, in contrast, could almost never get a sighting by wishing for it and then watching the sky. Perhaps those events were best shown to me when I was in an emotionally open state of mind, and perhaps the rational, conscious part of my mind had to be that still and receptive, to clearly register the detailed events of often only a few seconds.

The exact synchronicity of the viewer's precise outdoor location and the moment of the sighting; its angle in the sky overlapping the direction of his gazing; the obvious eye-catching nearby objects in the night-sky; its head-on aimed, flashing, or brightly intense light; and abrupt changes in the UFO's appearance or movement as he watches, cannot statistically-viewed be by chance. In these cases, the viewer is being addressed.

The UFO events often happened in the same familiar outdoor locations, where I already felt comfortable and confident, for example, from my back terrace or the quiet parking lot outside my front door.

Usually no one else in the area is looking up at that angle, or is around at that very moment, which convinces me this is a private contact from their side.

The repetitive exact timing of the sightings when one's alone, shows that they're somehow simultaneously coordinated with the individual viewer's exact location (from) and the general or specific direction and angle at which they're looking (toward) – and they often appear obviously nearby that temporary sight vector. They seem to be using a telepathic tip-off or short-term clairvoyance, when my mind-set and the state of my nervous system were rightly aligned, to set up the exact timings and locations for my unexpected sightings.

A UFO can evidently pose as a standing star; so it must know how big both the star's size and its own light appears to us below. Likewise, when it suddenly appears near an obvious object like an airplane or isolated planet we're watching, it must pick up the general angle of our vision. (#2, 6, 7)

Exact awareness of our 3-D visual focusing ability at a perspective of distance, would require reading parts of our brain-waves. Or knowing how we form pictures from sense-impressions within the range of our visual wavelengths, how our brain computes the incoming outer vibrational factors which determine these – that is, from earlier gathered knowledge, anticipating the spectrum of human eyesight - and then, with their own equipment, almost instantly playing back these factors to scale and sending measured signals which will attract our sight and stimulate our interpretation of the result. No mean task.

As an exception, our contact was more consciously 2-way during the start of my brief third series of UFO sightings, when I was both empty yet expecting to see a UFO, and therefore not shocked when I first saw it. (#16)

In my next-to-last sighting, during a high UFO's (probably routine) flight surveillance of the city area below, when I recognized it, it stopped behind a little cloud and shined at me for a few seconds, before continuing its open flight. This mutual nod implies precisely registering my focused sight and thought. Maybe it sent a greeting, or just checked out this witness. (#17)

Making me aware of our obvious interactive connection

At the "Big Dipper" event, during their stationary observation lasting anywhere up to half an hour, as I meditated outdoors, I suppose that besides following my ongoing mental states and maybe even contents to some degree, that they could read/perceive the main psychic left-overs of my life story and also the still continuing even earlier theme and circumstances of my working with higher consciousness-levels. That this further whetted their interest in me. (Of course, that can be my simple delusion of grandeur.) (#6)

Strategies for handling the viewer's emotional outbursts

When the himself-watched intent viewer of a UFO's movement has a relevant focused thought about it, which suddenly gets amplified by the rush of a passionate emotion, an intelligence in the UFO must be able to both immediately pick up the human electromagnetic charged thought, decide how to react, and put that into a sudden new maneuver, all within a fraction of a second. (This is also one of the in-born tools of our own one-on-one mutual communication.)

Examples:

During the "crash-descending" incident, reacting to my shocked wish for its safety by immediately returning to its distant size and calm flight. (#2)

Following a momentary pause, if the UFO's veering to both sides was a direct reaction to my abrupt anger, then it's both sensitive to and self-protective against the viewer's aggressive outbreaks. The person can't hit it with further strong, negative thoughts when it flies in uneven curves, because it takes a little time for the thought to formulate and reach up to the UFO, which has meanwhile veered over to a new spot. But when my mind returned to quiet wonder (at its maneuvers), it returned to its straight flight course. (#10).

Time-lapses

At the beginning of my very first flight sighting, the first oval disappeared ("turned off") for a tiny segment of a second, then reappeared in the same place, but now flying at a much different angle. But at each of its following turns, there was no perceptible pause, nor were there such pauses in any other sightings. The pause could have been an initial "wake up" signal. (#2)

It first showed up in flight outside my partially obstructed back window view, after I had started watching the small arc of visible sky. Then, after my intentionally waiting about 4 minutes before looking out the front window, within a few seconds, it again flew the same way. When I then quickly moved to outdoors - higher up but again from the original direction, it crossed the whole visible sky.

This implies that it (or they) awaited and then registered my gaze - even though this was from indoors, from opposite viewpoints, and included a considerable time-lapse - and then reacted very quickly. It reacted to my punctuated gazes as if they were just one continuous now. (#10)

How can it so fast maneuver to the narrow angle of the sky we're looking at, or are we attracted to look there through a telepathic signal (or vice versa)? Either it must be able to register, decide, compute, and both change angles and precisely cover distances faster than we can think, or it must be able to manipulate our thought, sense, and reaction processes at the speed of our most efficient intuition.

Their often-observed quickness of reaction timing becomes possible if the combined time for their unexpected perception of a signal/stimulus + thorough analysis of it + practical reaction time is nearly instantaneous by our body's standard, and yet comparable to our own computers' speed. Reaching so much so fast is like a slowing down of our time.

There went a whole minute between its having the illuminated semi-circular orange shape with a briefly darkened section, and the energy-stars outbursts in now empty space, and then again between the extinguished stars and the UFO's fully re-lit shape. The assumed tapping of energy from the electric mast's high-power wires was in slow Earth time, perhaps because the wire's rate of electric pulsation plus low hovering near or standing on Earth-gravity slowed its operations down. (#9)

During the sightings, the UFOs must combine our own Earth-time and their own energy's almost instantaneous (space)time scales. Using the reasonable assumption that spacetime bends - and that they're far advanced in riding both distant and local energy currents - perhaps the electro-magnetic pulsations from our nervous system, thoughts, feelings, etc. are just another sub-level of the fields they're so accustomed to reading and analyzing.

Their Agenda

Pedagogical series of lessons

Each UFO event seems to show a wealth of new information and corroborates earlier sightings - they don't contradict each other, and their details seem to be inter-related.

One pedagogical strategy used by the UFOs' programmers seems to be:

A simple shortly-viewed shape in one sighting was an introduction to its more detailed version in especially the following, but also later sightings.

The size of the packet of new, related details in two or more UFO sightings which happen immediately or soon after each other (with their inherent invitation to further examine them) - equals the intentional speed of the pedagogical teaching about them.

This speed is kept on the interception between what (in this case) I can manage within the boundaries of my conscious understanding, but yet still stimulating my unconscious mind's learning too. In this way the content and details remain in a suspended state of animation within me, so that I can continue to learn from them whenever I later re-examine the material (even now, 50 years later).

The dream-symbol in my psyche for this process was: There's no lid on the open test-tube used for transporting the information about a complex UFO incident, because then the container must be handled with care, and the accessibility to its contents remains easy and direct, so that I can further examine them at any time.

Another dream-symbol for this was: The detail in common from the two sightings moves outwards from the edge of bent space-time. That's symbolized as outwards flight from - the mid-way point, half-way down the common edge between two triangular faces of a pyramid.

Examples from my first 3 actual UFO sightings, happening within 2 days:

Events 2 + 3 = showing its top-side dome (close up vs. distant)

Events 2 + 4 = showing rolling anti-gravity energy on its bottom side (red during crash-descending flight vs. yellowish white during unperturbed low flight)

Events 2 + 3 + 4 = showing the interlocked energy fields of a pair in flight together (adjacently parallel, controlled weaving, close up touching, and two pairs' coordinated free-lance maneuvers).

After my wondering about a certain area of details or their mechanisms for several days, the next sightings often reveal more details in that area.

Maybe the profound and shifting content of their communications follows the principle, "Better to teach too much, than too little."

There were 3 series of tutored lessons given me. The first series was the first 10 events, which were each only a few seconds long. This was successfully completed after 3 months. The second series was the next 4 long events (the last one contained several evenings of extended sightings), each lasting from half an hour to more than an hour. I halted this series in 2 places: from self-doubt after the helicopters incident, and from anxiety after several hours with the shifting and ongoing antenna-signals. So after about 1½ months, it remained incompletd, due to me.

2½ months later, the third series' 2 short events with their 4-month interval were both seen from my terrace, where I felt most at ease. Both were much more detailed and complex than their comparable counterparts from the initial first series. The very complicated series of star-shaped flashes in #15 mirrored the introductory, simple flashes from #1. And the magnified details of the shared energy-field of a pair of parallel flying UFO's in sighting #16 helped explain #2, 3, 4, and 5.

This offered me a new series of contacts with more information and promised a deeper level of insight, yet this series was again aborted from anxious fear. I deeply regret forcefully stopping those progressing lessons (I took off my glasses for a year and couldn't see anything distant). There was a short after-event in another country 3 years later, which made me feel good. My continuing regret may, however, be fuel for my later continued work with all the witnessed material.

Inevitable unknowability

I can't know how much of what the UFOs showed was to attract my attention, to teach me something specific, to study me as a chosen example of a larger category, or was just necessary for their practical functioning at the moment, apart from any witness's observation.

Motivations for interactive connections

Elsewhere, maybe there's a standard protocol for visiting planets which have demonstrated atmospheric atomic fusion or fission technologies, and our atom bomb explosions telegraphed our potential.

Perhaps they want to study us using various electro-magnetic techniques. To invite us to the family of constructive, technologically advanced races, when we show that we've emotionally evolved far enough. To communicate with our unconscious senses and cognitive processes, as well as our conscious discernment and amazement, in order to help guide our clearly needed further development.

Through the process of our meetings, we learn about and from each other. Maybe they purposely deepen the contact, when they encounter new positively-attuned, concentrated and focused, fast-thinking and precisely formulating witnesses, who will then document the UFOs' detailed behaviour and their own strong experiences for also other people.

By mutually interacting with the isolated viewer, these UFOs could both study a segment of humanity, and pass on info about themselves, which would probably be shared with another wider segment.
